

In this talk I present a new model of dynamic automata networks and discuss a collection of problems that can be studied for these, including the tree formation problem, emulation of other automata models, synchronization and mutual exclusion, time-space trade-offs, and fault models.